When she's not creating stunning interiors, designer and interior architect Lorraine Rogers-Bolton can be found practicing yoga at the end of her dock overlooking the river. Having grown up with an artistic background, Rogers-Bolton has long adored art, architecture and design. "For the past 25 years, I have been able to meld these passions by providing my clients with interior architecture as well as interior design," she says of her firm, Rogers Design Group. "We create spaces that are contemporary in nature, with design that is eclectic and interesting, contrasting one element with another." Driven by the satisfaction of knowing they create a positive space for each client, Rogers-Bolton and her designers, who she calls "inspirational team players" and "her second family," aim to perfect every inch of a space. As for the key to maintaining work/life balance while striving for perfection, Rogers-Bolton says, "Passion. Work and play with passion."

for any designer. It feeds the fuel of creative juices that can inspire great work.

Milestones in your firm's success?

Our most thrilling moment was receiving an ASID award for our own offices in 2007. This began a string of winning every year. To be recognized by our peers is a great honor.

Standout projects?

A recent penthouse in the Ritz-Carlton Residences. The goal was to create the most contemporary, unique space with furnishings of the highest caliber and quality available. It was challenging and rewarding.

Travel destination that has most influenced your work?

The Viceroy Anguilla resort, which is the epitome of contemporary, warm architecture and design. The interiors enhance the water views perfectly.

Motto you live by?

'Optimism is a happiness magnet. If you stay positive, good things and good people will be drawn to you.'

Favorite store to shop? Where is it, and why is it your favorite?

NET-A-PORTER. The best part of coming home is having a package waiting for you at the door.

If I weren't in this industry, I'd be a ...

Psychologist. I have a minor in psychology, and I call upon that knowledge on a daily basis. It's fascinating to really understand the human mind.
